According to Hindu teaching, all living things are a conglomeration of four elements (fire, air, water and earth) that are in constant motion. In Hindu cosmology, a dualistic view of the world prevails, where deities are located in the higher, heavenly, and people live in the lower, earthly. Dualism also manifests itself in religion. The Shirdashi, the holy scripture of Hinduism, says that human beings are born from eternal matter called Prakriti, and that in the final life people will be united with the gods. The main goal of the goddess is destruction and destruction, and her husband - the son of Shiva - tries to prevent her from doing this. The demon king Mara, played by a boy, has his own twin brother, and it turns out that he is like no one's sister. Mara tries to steal as many souls from living beings as possible, and the demon king tries to stop him. But still, he avoids victory, because Mara is his true rival, and his own daughters play an important role in his games. They will arrange so that all people die and only a few remain
