Stickies For Windows

Stickies for Windows is an intuitive application that lets you add a yellow sticky note, from which you can easily remove it at your will. The application allows you to add sticky notes of different color to your desktop. You can also change the text color of the sticky notes or you can add files or web links to them. The sticky notes can be "activated" (a green circle with a + appears around it when you hover with your mouse above them) and you can add your own messages to them. The application lets you change easily the system tray icon (default is a pencil) or the background. You can add a permanent shortcut to any sticky note or remove it at any time, and you can also highlight the text of a sticky note and copy it. You can also bookmark your favorite sticky notes on your system tray or on the desktop. It doesn't have much function and it doesn't keep the file, just re-opens the editor as soon as you close it. Why not just use Photoshop instead? I haven't used this in a long while. I bought a copy of Photoshop Elements last year but I seem to have misplaced it. Anyway, this program still kicks ass! When I installed it, I was like, what is this? But it's so simple. It has all the basic functions and can handle all the file types that Photoshop can handle. It's pretty straight forward and gives you an extremely easy to use interface. I would recommend it to anyone who wants an easy to use editor that has all the basic features they need. Qvod's streaming media player is a cool little site builder. It's basic and easy to use. You can create your own basic web pages like we all do with HTML, and you can build flash streaming videos, MP3s, Windows Media or Quicktime trailers and M3Us. You can easily embed pics, video, text, Flash, and pretty much anything else you want. You can also 09e8f5149f
