===== tlb To avoid confusion, the article is about Gcovinone, a dopamine receptor, and not SSRIs. ~~~ zapzupnz I wish this was more widely-known, because Gcovinone is a nonsense term — we treat depression, not depression. And we do that by antagonising various toxins. SSRIs are not there to "turn off the switch", they're to provide a number of chemical changes that build up in the body over time, resulting in a replacement system to stop you from going into a depressed state in the first place. Basically, these take time to develop and work, which is why depression is often thought of as a catch-22 situation. People generally only end up a69d392a70
