To compare outcomes of laparoscopic partial nephrectomy (LPN) and robotic-assisted laparoscopic partial nephrectomy (RALPN) by controlling for the learning curve and surgeon. In this case-matched, retrospective study (2005-2009), a total of 153 consecutive patients underwent LPN or RALPN by a single surgeon with at least 2 years of experience. Clinical variables of age, tumor size, body mass index (BMI), ASA score, and preoperative renal function were evaluated. Operative time, blood loss, conversion rate, estimated blood loss (EBL), complications, and hospital stay were measured and analyzed. The learning curve was assessed by comparing the mean operative time and mean EBL of the first 40 versus the last 53 patients. Although a trend of increasing BMI was noted in the robotic cases, no other significant differences were found in the matched case-matched analysis. The number of patients undergoing LPN and RALPN was equal. The mean operative time was significantly shorter in the first 40 cases (218 vs 203 minutes, $P = .0001$) and decreased significantly from the beginning to the end of the learning curve (218 vs 162 minutes, $P = .0001$). The mean EBL decreased significantly from 72 to 36 mL ($P = .0001$) over time. No significant differences were found in the conversion rate (2.5%) between the two groups. The LPN group had an increased mean grade of complications (2.7% vs 0%, $P = .002$). There was no statistically significant difference in terms of postoperative hospital stay (2.2 vs 2.3 days, $P = .5$), transfusion rate (3.8% vs 4.5%, $P = .8$)

How can I do this? A: jQuery(document).ready(function($) { $('.selector').click(function(event) { event.stopPropagation(); }); }); The return false; in your example is never going to stop the event from bubbling up to the parent. It's simply returning false from the function; you don't want to be returning false unless you plan on doing something more complicated, say from some function called from within the clicked event like so: jQuery(document).ready(function($) { $('.selector').click(function(event) { $.ajax({ url: "some/url", data: { a: 1 }, success: function() { return false; } }); }); }); T2 and T3 vertebral epiphysial rows in juvenile Macaca arctoides.
