I'm working with OpenCV for a while and I have a problem. I'm trying to develop an application to grab all "visible faces" from the letter. Is this possible? A: Yes, it is possible. According to CvHaarClassifierCascade documentation: haar_face (haar_face (src_image, outlines, out_img), outlines, (int)size, k) → cv::Mat Vectorize a set of HOG features. Works only for CvHaarClassifierCascade type. The function creates a cascade from the given source image and stores the result in out_img. The input image must be converted to 8-bit integer (CV_8UC1) or 16-bit integer (CV_16UC1) format and can have the CV_32FC1 type. The data are represented in memory as a floating-point matrix with the CV_32FC1 type. In other cases, the function returns an error. To create a cascade you could use cvCascadeClassifierCascadeLoad method and build your own cascade. I'm not quite sure that the service on this can be done in the USA. To narrow it down, you have to work from a pin or a serial number. The issue of the pin seems to be that the ecu does not think it is the right pin for registering the key as it has a different number than the pin they have on the key. You can even have the dealer run your (pick a) pin using their in-car diagnostic tools. (sorry, I have no idea what model car you have and don't see a link to do a search). For example, a VIN #, a serial number, Description: DivX Pro 10.8.7 + Keygen!
