DOWNLOAD Boeing confirms 737 MAX 8 software flaw Published duration 5 April 2019 image copyright Reuters image caption The investigation into a fatal Ethiopian Airlines flight led to the grounding of all 737 MAX planes US aviation authorities have confirmed that software has been installed in new planes to disable new safety features designed to prevent a repeat of last year's Ethiopian Airlines plane crash. As part of the investigation into the crash, software was found to be missing from an important safety feature. Boeing said it was in the process of installing the software on all 737 MAX planes. The plane was flown from Addis Ababa to Nairobi on 10 March 2018 when a malfunctioning sensor caused it to dive. The crash, in which 157 people were killed, led to the grounding of all 737 MAX planes. Investigators have not announced the cause of the crash, but have said it was an accident caused by a shared problem between two sensors. The new software was to be installed on all planes from this month, Boeing said. The company said it had installed the new software on all 737 MAX planes and that it was "fully in place" in all 800 engines. On Friday, the US Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) confirmed that software was installed to disable the Maneuvering Characteristics Augmentation System (MCAS), which was found to have been disabled when the plane crashed. The FAA said the software was installed on new planes that have not yet begun commercial flights. This includes 10 planes that are Boeing's own 737 MAX planes and will be delivered to customers before the
