An even more intense experience on console FIFA has gone to a new level of realism with the introduction of HyperMotion Technology. The accurate representation of the appearance, playing style and physique of high-performance players. 2. A more realistic approach to dribbling and ball control. 3. More realistic and varied force feedback, allowing the player to interact with the ball in a more natural way. 4. Real-life patterns of movement in the physical condition of players - resulting in an even more realistic on-screen performance. 5. More realistic AI behaviour, with every player able to sense the player's strengths and weaknesses, making every game feel fresh and unpredictable. 6. A more compact, responsive on-screen HUD, which is now more easily read and understood. 7. Multiple camera angles with variable distance that are more closely representative of match conditions. 8. On-screen information, including the distance between teammates and the location of the ball. 9. Greater accuracy of on-screen timing of goals, saves and corners. 10. More natural body rotation and moving in different directions while still maintaining balance. 11. More realistic passing and shooting. "FIFA is a sport known for its unpredictable nature and that is what we wanted to recreate. The introduction of HyperMotion Technology means that, for the first time, we can make the on-screen action even more unpredictable and fun." Andrea Bayarti, Director of Product, FIFA "We are very happy to have worked closely with D-BOX to bring FIFA to life in the way this cutting-edge technology allows. This is the first time we've had control over movement for a whole year's worth of player development, training and matches. We're really excited to bring these innovations to FIFA so players can experience a more immersive, accurate and authentic sport." Carsten Kuhlmann, Managing Director D-BOX As a part of the development of FIFA 22, D-BOX and EA Sports collaborated with the UEFA and FIFA to deliver the most realistic versions of each match
