Q: Division overflow I am trying to divide a number by 2 and get 0 as the result, but my program is not giving the desired output. This is what I want: Input: 16777216
Desired result: 0 What is happening:
1 The code I used is: `decimal int1 =`

---

16777216; decimal result; result = int1/2; Console.WriteLine(result); I thought this is due to the integral part and decimal part of the 16777216, i.e.  $16777216 / 2 =$ 8388608, but after division, for integral part, we are getting remainder of  $16777216/2=$
8388609, so how can the result be 0.
P.S : I don't want C# but when were not related to hacking. A security failure would come as a blow for the small economy, which is heavily reliant on exports to North Africa and Europe. "Tunisian bourse is not trading today," the main bourse said in its statement. In the statement, the Bourse, or Bourse de Tunis, said: "This technical problem occurred when the market data feed stopped working. It has been resolved and the Bourse is now restarting trading." The companies affected included oil and gas company Ras Laffan 3, part of the Ras Laffan Group, which also owns Moaset, a mining company. Ras Laffan 3 is the largest listed company by market value in Tunisia, with its share price falling by almost 70 percent during the trading suspension. The Bourse had halted the trading of shares in Ras Laffan 3 due to a technical problem at 5pm and trading resumed at 6:25pm. The markets closed for trading at 6:30pm. The decline came as the markets suffered a sell-off in the afternoon, with the overall FTSE/Dax index in Frankfurt falling more than 3 percent. Tunisian shares were the second worst performing stocks on the
