Background I'm making an enhancement to my algorithm that took five years and hundreds of thousands of lines to develop. I thought I had the code figured out that I was missing a critical piece. Therefore, I'd like to make a unit test to verify that my implementation handles this edge case correctly. The problem is that the input data may be sensitive. I want it to be in-memory (to make sure there's no way to get it out of context). What I've tried I tried simply using a factory that creates the exact instance of the class the test-case is testing, but this doesn't work. The problem is that when the test ends, the object is GC'd, and the sensitive data is gone. I could: save it to a file when the test is done, and load it with the next test. deflate it
