Q: Determine type of image for a given url of server I have a website where I store a php script on server with the option of rendering an image. When I upload an image on my site, I'm supposed to generate a random id and a location of where to store the image and then upload it. How can I determine if the image format is correct? Like png, gif or jpg. This way, the server won't render the images of type.png or.jpeg. A: I suppose your image files are inside a sub-folder of your website. Each image (or js or css file) you upload might have different extension according to the folder structure. This is the code I usually use (on server side):
