Hospice care is rapidly expanding, but end-of-life care for terminally ill patients may be inaccessible to many who are being cared for in acute care hospitals. This study was designed to assess outcomes of hospice educational programs for medical and nonmedical personnel. A retrospective analysis of pre- and post-test scores on the assessment of dying course (ADC) was performed for 74 residents, nurses, physicians, and patients of a 320-bed, multidisciplinary hospice center in Oklahoma City. Post-testing scores on the ADC suggest that the program was of some benefit to participants in their knowledge and attitudes about palliative care. Significant improvement occurred between pre- and post-testing scores for patients (p Q: Java Web Application Security I have recently been doing some research on Java Web Applications and the best way to implement security. I have seen a few different approaches to it all, and I am looking for a good combination to help keep us all safe from the most vulnerable and troublesome methods. Right now we have implemented logging in and have a logging class that logs everything, but we have also been looking at sessions and coming up with a session managing class that logs everything in plain text. We have also been looking at the guys over at realm. As far as I know realm does not have the level of security we want. This leads to the other approaches I am looking at which are: OAuth2. I've also looked at how to do it on Spring MVC since we were originally using Struts. I know how to do it with spring, but we are using 1cdb36666d

MicroRNAs are small, highly conserved, noncoding, single-stranded RNAs that are known to be key regulators of biological processes. Since microRNAs are implicated in many diseases, there is a growing interest in microRNA research. The development of effective tools to characterize microRNA, including quality control (QC) standards, remains a bottleneck for widespread application in this field. In this study, an efficient and reliable method for the preparation of multiple QC standards for microRNAs was developed. This method involved a stepwise, high-throughput microRNA preparation procedure based on a looped T7 RNA polymerase and the subsequent hybridization of microRNAs with a 5'-digoxigenin-labeled poly(A) tail to pre-coated microarrays for the detection and quantification of microRNAs. As validated by microRNA standards from human, cow, and zebrafish, this method is simple, efficient, and reliable, and also allows the labeling of microRNAs with small amounts of RNA. In addition, this method allows for the characterization of individual microRNAs by using internal standards in one experiment. Taken together, this method will facilitate the use of multiple quality controls for microRNAs.adeno-reads100.fasta.
