The present invention relates generally to a method and apparatus for producing electrosurgical jaw electrodes, and specifically, for producing thermally conductive electrosurgical jaw electrodes wherein the electrodes are easily produced with a uniform temperature distribution, and because they are thermally conductive, are able to heat and cool more quickly. The invention also relates to a method for producing a thermally conductive electrosurgical jaw electrode which is quick and easy to produce, and which has virtually no restriction on the various metals which are suitable for use in the electrode. Additionally, the invention relates to a method for producing thermally conductive electrosurgical jaw electrodes which are readily adaptable for use with reusable and disposable electrosurgical jaw apparatus. Heretofore electrosurgical electrosurgical jaw apparatus of the type with which this invention is most closely related has been produced in two ways. The first one of the methods is a mechanical type wherein a handle (wrist support) is held by the operator and on this handle is mounted the electrosurgical jaw apparatus which is received by the operator, usually with the handles connected by a rigid member. This type of jaw apparatus generally has a pair of jaw members which are pivotally mounted on this handle. In one case, a single rod connects the jaw members and their pivot axle is located at the handle. In the other, a pair of rods connects the jaw members and their pivot axles are located at the handle. The operator turns the handle and these rods move from their normal closed position to open the apparatus. When the jaws are opened they are free to assume their open position. Generally, these jaw members also have a hinge-like mechanism for holding them in their closed position. Further, a means is provided for clamping or connecting the jaws. These jaw members can be used with either a reusable or a disposable type of electrosurgical jaw apparatus. The second method of jaw construction is generally mechanical with the above being an electrical type. As can be seen from the above description, there are two main types of prior art electrosurgical jaw apparatus which differ from one another primarily in the manner in which the electrode or jaw is connected to the handle. One main variation of the art
