The Mahabharata is the world's longest poem, and is of equal importance, more than the Iliad of Homer or the Aeneid of Virgil. From the perspective of Hindus, the Mahabharata is the Hindu Epic par excellence. Written. Rev. W. H. Hope - Sunday 3rd February 1861, G. M. H. Translation: M. N. Srirama Murthy Source:Satyirical, legend-laden, fantastic, the Mahabharata depicts a historical reality, but quite frequently the historic reality is forgotten and the legend loses its meaning. The events portrayed, though unusual, are based on events that happened in the 12th Century BC. Mahabharata or Shanti Parva (Sanskrit: महाभारत, meaning "Great Compendium") is an epic poem in Sanskrit. Composed of 100,000 sargas, it deals with the wars between the Pandavas and the Kauravas, and is set during the Vedic period and the reign of the last great epic heroes. The poem has received many commentaries and adaptations in Sanskrit and vernacular languages, and is considered to be one of the most important Indian classical works. It is also noted for its extensive descriptions of the land and culture of Ancient India. Fiction and non-fictional aspects have frequently been combined in its literary adaptations.
