Besides that, the current climate of 'Big Data' is one of increasing use of techniques traditionally associated with psychologists: insights drawn from cognitive psychology and cognitive neuroscience. Just to give one example, Bavelier et al. (2014) recently showed that rapid rhythm perception (a form of action observation) could enhance visuo-spatial working memory. This suggests a form of social knowledge transfer that could involve getting insights from others (in the form of music and spoken language) – and using them to improve your own thinking. Personally, I'm very excited about the potential of the field to help us understand how people acquire new beliefs, so I'm not surprised to see it get so much attention on a mass level. As the field continues to develop and there's more research coming out, I think we'll have a much better idea of how to do it and what particular insights we can draw from it.JavaScript is currently disabled.Please enable it for a better experience of Jumi. In a telephone call on Thursday between President Donald Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, Trump suggests "a favor" for the president-elect. What's happening Trump is directing Energy Secretary Rick Perry to work on a plan to drill for oil and gas in the Arctic Ocean, The Washington Post reports. Trump and Perry met at the White House for a more-than two-hour meeting on Thursday. The report has been the subject of speculation for months, with many seeing it as an attempt by Trump to distance himself from his controversial business interests. The Arctic Ocean already is home to oil companies, including Royal Dutch Shell, which successfully completed a drilling operation in 2014. Why it matters The Trump administration's claim that the president is not involved in business deals has come under increasing pressure. On Thursday, CNN reported that before the election, Trump's attorney, Michael Cohen, sent the then-candidate, via his company Essential Consultants, a letter promising that he would use the firm's company to pay $120,000 to two women who alleged affairs with Trump. Cohen told the FBI in interviews this summer that Trump had a "general understanding" that the Trump Organization could benefit from his company's relationship with Russian investors, but as president, he has said repeatedly that there is no connection. This latest report is yet another example of the Trump administration stonewalling on the question of whether or not the president is involved in business transactions. What to watch Trump is in New York on Thursday for meetings with representatives from Health and Human Services and Labor,
