Specific efforts will be directed at utilizing phosphorus 31 nuclear magnetic resonance (31P NMR) spectroscopy to study changes in energy metabolism in response to changes in the level of energy substrates. Normal subjects and patients with single or multiple defects of energy metabolism will be studied. Intravenous infusion of glucose, free fatty acids and heparin will be used to alter the level of glucose, free fatty acids and insulin. Data obtained from 31P NMR studies will be compared with those obtained with radioisotope methods and with serum metabolites assayed by traditional means to establish correlations between the rate of substrate uptake, energy charge, nucleoside triphosphate pools and the level of intracellular inorganic phosphate.

Studies of muscle and liver in situations of altered phosphorus metabolism will be done as will similar studies of the effect of varying insulin levels on muscle and liver metabolism. The effect of S-100B on the proliferation and differentiation of cultured rat embryo DRG neurons in vitro. The effect of S-100B on the proliferation and differentiation of cultured rat embryo dorsal root ganglion (DRG) neurons was examined in vitro. The present study showed that S-100B (10-100 microg/ml) significantly increased the ratio of DRG neuron number to total cell number of the culture in a dose-dependent manner. The addition of S-100B at a concentration of 10-40 microg/ml in the culture medium during the period of nerve growth factor (NGF) stimulation increased the percentage of neurite-bearing cells, the neurite length and the number of neurofilament-positive cells. The addition of S-100B at a concentration of 30-60 microg/ml in the culture medium during the period of NGF stimulation significantly increased the percentage of cells displaying neurofilament-positive perikarya. In addition, it also increased the percentage of cells that originated from the cultured DRG explants retaining the ability to produce neurofilament-positive perikarya. Furthermore, S-100B added during the period of DRG axonogenesis showed no noticeable effect on the number of cells in culture. These findings suggest that S-100B may play an important role in neurite extension and neuronal development in the spinal cord and DRG sensory neurons.Q: Rails 3.0 as the only user with Devise on an intranet I'm running a Mac, and I've
