To determine the ability of electron-beam computed tomography (EBCT) to detect acute and chronic myocardial infarction (MI) in cynomolgus monkeys (Macaca fascicularis). In 7 healthy and 3 scarred (subacute) myocardial infarct monkeys, the presence of an MI was indicated by sites of increased attenuation and/or a wall motion abnormality on EBCT images. The viability of the myocardium was also determined by histopathology. Results were compared with findings in postmortem examinations. Postmortem, the infarct sizes were determined in all animals.
