The United States Federal Reserve had no power to impose financial sanctions against Iran before 2009, documents from that period show. The documents are included in a government release of the record of a meeting chaired by the late Democratic Congressman Henry B. Gonzalez, the chairman of the House subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, which, along with the Iran-Contra Committee, examined a set of then classified documents related to the Iran-Contra affair.

The records, which were obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by the House of Representatives Ombudsman's Office, show that the Federal Reserve Board in 1990 had no authority over banking or financial sanctions. The request, made by The Washington Examiner on Wednesday, was sent to the Federal Reserve's Board of Governors on Oct. 3, 2009. After a considerable delay, the records were finally released on Dec. 21. The release of the records ends the dispute between the House Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade and the Federal Reserve. The release of the records also ends a long dispute between Congress and the Federal Reserve about the substance of the documents, which were classified as "Secret" until a judge ruled in December 2010 that the records should not be kept secret after all. The National Archives released the records in their entirety in December 2011. The documents in question — more than 4 million pages — were originally part of the file of Oliver North, the National Security Council's senior aid to the Central Intelligence Agency, who was convicted in 1989 of diverting nearly a million dollars in "contraband" funds to the Nicaraguan contra rebels. Despite the legal determination that the documents were not classified as "Top Secret" — they weren't — the panel discussed only two parts of the file, one dealing with arms sales to Iran and the other on Executive Order 12333, the U.S. order that provides legal
