books have a few chapters \hat{A} . Our results for ALS patients are interesting: we did not observe a correlation between the increase of putative WUSCL1-positive cells and the clinical onset.

This result could be explained by the earlier appearance of WUSCL1-positive cells than the clinical onset of the disease (ALS patients range from 58 to 90 years of age, while clinical onset of ALS in our patients ranged from 50 to 75 years of age).

Nevertheless, the fact that the ratio of putative WUSCL1-positive cells is increased among samples of patients with a very late onset is consistent with previous studies reporting an increase of WUSCL1-positive cells in the spinal cord of patients with a very late onset of ALS \[[@pone.0120600.ref020]\]. An increase of WUSCL1-positive cells in

ALS patients compared to healthy subjects has been reported also by other groups \[[@pone.0120600.ref021]--[@pone.0120600.ref024]\] but this is the first time that such a correlation has been reported in a larger group of ALS patients from the same patient population. The increase of WUSCL1-positive cells, in patients carrying pathogenic mutation, compared to healthy subjects is consistent with previous reports showing that WUSCL1

expression is increased
