producer. Career Inspiration first gained exposure with her rendition of "Roxanne", a song by David Soul which in turn sampled Barry White's "I'm Gonna Make You Love Me". The song, with its sexy disco beat, became a club hit in Canada and while she does not deny the Chicago Connection - that she was influenced by - she said she never listened to music when she was growing up. Inspiration's vocals are slightly quieter than Soul's, and her range is quite limited. "Roxanne" and "On My Own" were commercially successful in Canada and the United States, and she has recorded many of her songs for other artists. She released two of her own singles, "We Can Dance" in 1986 and "Pretty Ribbons" in 1993. Inspiration's most successful album is Silence, released in 1992. The album, which was a Top 10 hit in Canada, was the highest selling album by a female artist on Columbia Records in Canada in 1992. The album won two Juno Awards in 1993, Best Pop Album and Artist of the Year. The video for "Silence", which featured scenes of a
