hemoglobin A1c in the treatment of type 2 diabetes mellitus]. Hemoglobin A1c (HbA1c) is one of the most accurate indicators of the mean plasma glucose concentration for the last two to three months. It is a non-denatured glycoprotein which is stable and independent of the treatment used. It is a reliable indicator of risk of vascular complications and improves the predictive ability for severe hyperglycemia and diabetes. Interventions to control glycaemia often have only a transient effect in the short-term, but typically result in a sustained reduction in HbA1c levels. The evidence for the effect of intensive treatment on preventing vascular complications is more compelling than for the effect on the incidence of microvascular complications. In patients with type 1 diabetes and poorly controlled type 2 diabetes, a reduction in HbA1c has been shown to reduce cardiovascular events. Consequently, it is relevant to control HbA1c levels to optimize the vascular risk c6a93da74d
