The Endocrine Surgical Association (ESA) is an international organization of high-quality, dedicated, and experienced endocrine surgeons. The mission of the ESA is to promote excellence in the practice and education of endocrine surgery through the development of educational guidelines and standards of surgical care, publication of peer-reviewed articles and editorials, and a continuing educational program to support and strengthen the future of endocrine surgeons. Please take the time to understand the endocrine system, including the structure, function, and complications and its most interesting disorders. For further questions you can ask at Endocrine Hub. The structures in the endocrine system that control the body's energy production include the glands (endocrine glands): Adrenal glands, pancreas, thyroid, and pituitary gland. The key hormones include: 1. Insulin (sugar level) 2. Growth hormones 3. Cortisol (stress) 4. Thyroid hormones 5. Sex hormones 6. Gonadal hormones: o Prolactin o Thyroid hormones o Human chorionic gonadotropin (hCG) o Androgens (male) o Estrogens (female) 7. Parathyroid hormone (bone density) 8. Pituitary gland is the master gland that governs the other glands. It secretes hormones that produce hunger and
