Does anyone know of a way to convert a non-standard ascii file into a standard file? For example, lets say you have a.svf file that is compressed and the.mxd file is expanded, but you need to be able to open the data file for editing, entering new data, or change the.mxd file based on the.svf file. I tried using Oryx and it didn't work. I have a.wrl file, but I want to open this in ArcGIS so I can use the tools I know how to use in ArcGIS. I looked into Spatialite but couldn't figure out how to do this type of conversion. Does anyone know a solution to this problem? Hello, this is a sort of request, I have a shaped tool that I make in AutoCAD which is used only to create fishnet for ground surface such as aeroplanes runways, streets, etc... This tool has been developed over 10 years ago, and it is used for creating fishnet data as input for a flood risk model in ArcGIS. However, is it possible to create fishnet in

ArcGIS directly? I tried to use the tool in ArcGIS but it does not work because it wants me to select the "shape file" which is a "potential cell" as I know it is. Basically, can I select in ArcGIS the "shape file" that I have in AutoCAD for the ground surface? Hello, this is a sort of request, I have a shaped tool that I make in AutoCAD which is used only to create fishnet for ground surface such as aeroplanes runways, streets, etc... This tool has been developed over 10 years ago, and it is used for creating fishnet data as input for a flood risk model in ArcGIS. this will not answer my needs but the most I can do is not just put the same files over and over again for every project. I need something like an output area where I can have different folders that link together. 5ec8ef588b
