That does not mean that you have to kill your current Windows 10 OS just because of this issue. You can simply reinstall it. In case you cant do the reinstallation, you need to figure out why it fails. Once the user-machine reboot is complete, the Windows 10 update will be performed. After all, the previous batch of updates will be applied to the system automatically. To avoid any errors, it is important to follow all the steps appropriately. This will allow the user to operate the command as administrator. The next step will be to look for the "\\windows\system32\config\system" folder. Once you find that folder, look for the "local.nsf" file. If the file is in green color, it means that the file is an unmodified/not corrupted one. If the file is blue in color, then, it means that the file has been modified, so you need to look for the reason behind that. If its yellow in color, there arent even modifications as we know. If there are no changed files, then you dont need to worry about it. If there are changes, the only course of action will be to look for the reason behind them. This is where one can encounter issues. Windows Update sometimes refuses to complete update installation. This is when you will need to fix the error.
