i was also very interested in indesigns 2018 release, and was unable to find any information about the new features. the only information i could find was on apple.com, and it was all about the new features in the pdf creation tools in the 2018 release. i found a recent presentation on indesign 2018, but theres no mention of how indesign will be able to import files in the new version. in my opinion, the biggest news in indesign 2018 is that it is getting its own update schedule. indesign will be updated every year, unlike pages and keynote, which have a schedule of one update every two years. i think that this is a great move, because indesign is becoming an ever larger part of the workflow of many people. thats why i will continue to use and update it, even though i dont know what to expect from the new version. i wanted to talk about the new page size, because theres a lot of assumptions being made by people. there was a time when working on press was the norm. it was a time when there was a definite workflow of design, layout, and press, and everyone knew how things worked. i suspect that this is why there was a definite workflow on the press side of the equation. however, i think that this is changing. people are now working from home, and they may not be familiar with the workflow of working with a designer and a printer. graphic designers can quickly draw the perfect logo and get started on a new project. the pen tool and pen pressure can also be used to draw with great precision. the brush tool can be used to add details to a design, or to fill areas with colors or other effects. the path tool can be used to add effects like warp and dissolve, as well as to create paths for objects that can be easily re-drawn. the gradient tool is used to apply color and transparency effects to an object.
