They will no longer need to use a desktop or laptop computer for the best application to do that. My other, other, other job used to be managing the desktop publishing production workflow for the New York Times. When I moved to San Francisco one year ago, I gave up my White House, New York Times, Washington Post, and Politico desktops. It was a good idea when I was only working from home. It is such a tiny fraction of the publishing industry at such a small scale to be digitally native. If you want to share your opinion, I'll be thrilled. If you have a project you have a goal to make a reality, talk to me. If you have any sort of issue you want your friends and family to keep an eye out for, please let me know.
