Survival and cell proliferation of ovine lymphocytes in the presence of autologous sheep erythrocytes during culture with vitamin A. The effect of vitamin A on the development of proliferative capacity of ovine lymphocytes in culture was studied. The erythrocyte-lymphocyte system was established with the use of the autologous and homologous sheep erythrocytes. An increase in survival of cells cultured without addition of vitamin A, as compared to cells cultured with 10 μ M vitamin A during the first 2 days of culture, was observed. Addition of 10 μ M retinyl acetate resulted in a significant increase in the lymphocyte proliferation at the dose of 20 μ M vitamin A. In the culture containing vitamin A, an increase in the total number of lymphocytes was observed; vitamin A did not influence the lymphocyte division. The cell density of lymphocytes cultured with vitamin A was higher than in cultures without vitamin A and it is likely that retinyl acetate caused the observed increase.⁸⁶
