The class-action suit was filed on Tuesday by lawyers with Chicago-based law firm Robbins Geller Rudman & Dowd LLP, whose attorneys have worked on a number of similar employment lawsuits over the past year. DoorDash Inc, the San Francisco-based company founded by CEO and Chief Operating Officer Anthony Casal, said in a statement that it is focused on treating its delivery workers fairly and provides a good work environment. "We have strong labor laws that provide protections to our employees and we have repeatedly turned over to law enforcement any allegations of wrongdoing. DoorDash will defend our business and employees against any allegations of wrongdoing and we look forward to being judged fairly," the company said. The suit, filed in federal court in San Francisco, claims that the delivery workers were misclassified as contractors rather than employees. That misclassification has enabled DoorDash to avoid paying workers the minimum wage of $10.10 per hour as well as overtime for hours worked in excess of 40 hours per week. The suit also alleges that the delivery workers are misclassified as independent contractors in order to avoid paying workers the proper hourly rates for workers classified as tipped employees, a group that includes workers who are paid a lower wage to supplement their regular hourly wage.
