If we want to study a technology, but don't have the resources to produce it, do we still need to study it (research it) and then not know how to produce it, or do we still study it but know that we can't produce it, and even so, that we might still be able to produce it in the future? A: If there is no longer any technology in existence, there is nothing to research. You can try to get old books that describe what they did, but you'll find that many of the old techs had better descriptions in other books and some were highly simplified because they weren't needed anymore. The present invention relates to a pharmaceutical composition for administration by intradermal injection. Intradermal injection is particularly useful in connection with the treatment of skin and scalp conditions such as acne, seborrhea, and psoriasis. Generally, intradermal injection is considered to be a safe and effective way to deliver a medication to the intradermal tissue. It has been found that a preferred route of administration for many medications is intradermal injection, such as by a needle, syringe, or the like. An intradermal injection is generally administered within the confines of a patient's skin, and may be given directly to the intradermal tissue or to the intradermal capillary network or other subcutaneous tissue. Some prior art devices and methods have used intradermal injections for a variety of different reasons. For example, intradermal injection devices and methods have been used for a number of years for the delivery of medications for the treatment of skin conditions such as acne,
